Imagine its 1832....

on Main Street in Williamsville, a busy & bustling place, much like it is now.

In the heart of the Village of Williamsville, at the "crossroads" of this frontier town, stood The Eagle House Tavern.

The Conestoga Wagon line, carried freight & passengers to the newly prospering City of Buffalo. They stopped in the Village once a day. Williamsville became a nightly stop over for folks traveling from Buffalo to Batavia.

Can you imagine the wagon wheels on the dirt road? horses tied up outside & shouts of merriment floating through the tavern doors?

The Holland Land Company was a surveying company that charted the scenic route along

Main Street and Ellicott Creek.

Regarding Williamsville, they decreed, "Bird, Beef and Bottle with a bed for the weary traveler".

When The Eagle House opened its doors, a hot meal would have cost about 25 cents and a bed for the night was 10 cents.

Originally, all of the Amherst Town Board meetings that were held here and thus began The Eagle House's "claim to fame" as being a "famous stopping place" welcoming patrons from all locales

Some evidence in Williamsville's history suggest that The Eagle House possibly a station on the Underground Railroad.

The tunnel system that is beneath The Eagle House and Main Street's north side would have provided a safe haven when moving from the United States to possibly Canada and safer locales.

We hope enjoy your visit to The Eagle House. We hope you soak in the historic ambiance and know that great strides are taken every day to preserve the character and original tradition of hospitality to all visitors.
